MEMORANDUM

Called at Pavonia Yacht Club, 12th Street and Avenue C, Bayonne, New Jersey in response to information from Mr. McCarter's office that police chief Dan Cady would be able to give some helpful information about Jane Gibson. Met Chief Cady who has been on the Bayonne police force for the past thirty years until six months ago when because of a change in administration he was compelled to resign. He was on a trip down south about a few weeks ago when he read about the Hall-Mills case and recognized the description of Jane Gibson as a woman who had previously lived in Bayonne, knew her as Eisleitner. Says her family was notorious. They were known in Bayonne as the black handers. This appellation had no serious significance but the children and others used this term to describe them. The house where they lived was located at First Street and Lard Avenue and has since been torn down.

Chief Cady states that her husband, meaning Jane Gibson, named Tommy Williams is still living. At this point I inquired whether he was not confuding Jane Gibson with her sister Madeline Williams but he was certain that he was not since the woman he has in mind had equestrian proclivities being frequently seen about Bayonne on a horse. Says Tommy Williams can be located through his brother "Yellow", who is employed at Swifts, meat packers, 8th Street and Avenue C, Bayonne. "Yellow" can be recognized by a very large "lump" under his left eye. When approached he may appear pugnacious but
